The main module uses the python module internally to manipulate data structures. It also uses the C++ DLL file to manipulate the data structures. The C++ file uses this module via a method call. The example code is shown below. When I compile this module I get the expected errors related to the warning message. For example: In the module header I have the following for each header that is compiled in by the main module. And of course I #include the header that is defined in the Python module in the main module. It is all fairly standard stuff. When I open the main module the header files are included as expected. But I do get an error when the C++ DLL module is compiled. For example: I get this error when I compile the C++ DLL module. But if I compile the C++ file as a standalone application it works as expected. If I switch the compiler between VC8 and VC9 it also works as expected. I still get this error when I compile with Visual Studio 2010. I have tried moving all the PyExcel references from the main module to the C++ module in a number of ways. But I still get the error. I have tried moving the module references to the C++ DLL and the C++ file. Again, I still get the same error. I have tried a number of different ways to include the C++ header. None of them seem to work. I have tried moving the C++ DLL to a completely different drive and then changing the Windows Path variable. Again, no luck. I have tried moving the PYTHONPATH f678ea9f9e
